A Rainy-Day Puddle Study

Lena wore yellow boots when steady rain covered the playground with puddles.

Her teacher gave the class wooden sticks marked with short measurement lines.

Lena found the deepest puddle beside the red playground slide.

She placed one stick straight down until it touched the pavement.

The water reached the fourth line, so Lena wrote four in her chart.

A smaller puddle near the gate reached only the second line.

The class compared both numbers after everyone returned to the dry classroom.

Lena learned that puddles can have different depths after the same rain.
