Pollinators in the Courtyard

The school courtyard contained lavender, sunflowers, mint, and purple coneflowers.

Ms. Patel's class watched the garden for ten minutes after morning recess.

They counted five honeybees visiting the lavender near the brick wall.

Two orange butterflies rested on the wide sunflower heads.

A hummingbird hovered briefly beside the red feeder before flying away.

Students used tally marks to record each pollinator without counting it twice.

Their final chart showed that bees visited more flowers than butterflies.

The class decided to plant more lavender along the sunny courtyard edge.
