Read the passage carefully. Then answer all 8 questions using details from the text.

Saving the Town's Old Photographs

The local history club received three boxes of photographs from a retired teacher.

Some pictures showed the town square before the modern bus station was built.

Club members wore clean cotton gloves to protect each photograph from fingerprints.

They wrote a unique number on an acid-free sleeve for every picture.

Mr. Gomez scanned the photographs at a high resolution without changing the originals.

Students entered dates, locations, and known names into a searchable catalog.

Two unidentified images were posted at the library for community help.

The finished archive allowed families to view local history without handling fragile prints.
