Preparing an Emergency Radio Kit

On Tuesday, Victor joined a project at the community center to test emergency radios.

The team labeled 9 observation points so every result could be traced to its source.

They used a battery tester and recorded the units beside each measurement.

Two students checked every entry before the group compared the results.

Their first comparison showed that the hand-crank model worked after stored batteries failed.

The group kept an unexpected result in the table and repeated that measurement instead of discarding it.

Based on the evidence, Victor proposed that the team write charging steps on the supply card.

The team saved its method, dates, and raw observations so another group could repeat the investigation.
